How to request Good Cause for non-cooperation with the DCSS

You may request Good Cause for not cooperating with the DCSS in a paternity or child support case if:

- You believe that you, your children, or the caregiver relative of the children may be in danger of physical harm from the parent who does not have custody.
- Legal proceedings for the adoption of your children are in court.
- You have been working with a public or licensed private social services agency for less than 90 days, to determine if your children will be adopted.
- You became pregnant because you were sexually assaulted.

You can request Good Cause or get more information about good cause from the DCSS office or the Family Assistance office where you applied for TANF cash assistance. If your request for Good Cause is approved, the DCSS is not required to get or enforce a child support order for you. The information you give is voluntary and it will be kept confidential. The DCSS will only use this information to help you. A finding of Good Cause must be reviewed by the DCSE every six months.
